NEW PUBLIC SERVICE CO. ORGANIZES

HOLDS FIRST MEETING AND CHOOSES SET OF OFFICERS

CONTROLS ELECTRIC AND GAS BUSINESS IN DAYTONA, AND GAS AND WATER IN SEABREEZE AND DAYTONA BEACH.

The Daytona Public Service company, a corporation recently organized by the owners of the Schantz Electric, Ice and Water company, the charter of which appeared in the columns of the Gazette-News some time since, held its first meeting yesterday. At this meeting a transfer of all the assets of the corporation was made and from this time on the business will be conducted under the name of the Daytona Public Service company.

The Schantz Electric Ice and Water company was organized in 1906, as an Ohio corporation, taking over at that time the electric and ice business owned by the Schantz estate. This business was started by Adam Schantz, Sr., in 1896, and at his death became the property of his estate. Since that time the business has practically been operated by the Schantz estate.

Two years ago the interest of the Schantz Electric Ice and Water company was purchased by The Light Heat & Power Corporation, of Boston, Mass., the principal officers of which are Messrs. Arthur E. Childs, Alfred Clarke and Addis M. Whitney, all of whom are well known to the citizens of Daytona.

About a year ago this corporation became interested in this community and seeing the rapidly increasing demands for further improvements, secured from the city of Daytona a franchise for the installation of a gas plant and further secured from the towns of Daytona Beach and Seabreeze franchises for the installation of gas and water plants. To better handle the increased investment and to make the company an entirely Daytona and Florida organization it was decided to organize the new company, viz: the Daytona Public Service company, which as a matter of fact is owned and controlled by the original purchasers of the Schantz Electric Ice & Water company.

The gas plant, which is now in operation, is built and equipped to take care of the needs of this vicinity for many years to come and is ready to furnish gas to consumers as fast as they can procure the necessary appliances. The gas now furnished is meeting with the highest approval from all those who have installed it and as fast as possible the mains will be extended throughout Daytona and across the river and it is probable that within the next year the entire peninsula will be supplied with gas and water for domestic use and fire protection.

BAD STORM PARALYZES THE NORTH

NEARLY ALL STATES IN THE GRIP OF SLEET, RAIN AND FOG

NASTY WEATHER FOLLOWS IN WAKE OF INTENSELY COLD WEATHER OF THE FIRST PART OF THE WEEK.

Although Daytona and this section of the south escaped the predicted cold wave during the past few days, the spread of cold weather still covers the north and the telegraphic reports to the Daily News today say the whole north is practically paralyzed and in the grip of a sweeping storm of sleet, rain and fog, following the intensely cold weather of the first part of the week.

Telegraph wires are down in many parts of the United States today and the Daily News wire reports have been seriously interrupted as a result. The sleet storm covers practically all of the north states, the rain is falling throughout the southern states and a heavy fog has enveloped the Atlantic coast.

DOWNTOWN OFFICE FOR EXPRESS CO.

TO BE LOCATED IN ARCADE BUILDING ON BEACH STREET

WORK OF MOVING FURNITURE WILL BE STARTED TOMORROW AND OFFICE WILL BE OPENED SOON.

The Southern Express company has finally decided to recognize Daytona as a real town and establish a downtown office. The office will be located in one of the stores of the Arcade building on North Beach street and will be ready for business the first part of next week.

This is the information given out by T. T. Walsh of Jacksonville, route agent for the company, who has been in Daytona for several days, in company with C. H. Cook of Miami, route agent in charge of the Florida East Coast line division, looking for a location for a downtown office.

Daytona will welcome the effort of the express company to improve conditions in this city and the relief from conditions as they have existed for years.

The work of transferring the furniture and business from the depot office to the Arcade will be started tomorrow and will be carried forward as fast as possible in the hope that the new office may be ready for the transaction of business by Monday.

The principal business of the company for Daytona will be transacted from the Arcade office, which will be used for the reception and delivery of light parcels. An office will also be maintained at the depot for the handling of liquor shipments and heavy articles. The idea of handling all liquor shipments at the depot is to relieve patrons from the necessity of having to shoulder in among negroes in the narrow passageway in front of the counter.

To further improve the conditions in this city the company has added another wagon, making three to be used in picking up and delivering parcels in the city.

Antidote for Blushing.

If you blush, put on glasses, advises Dr. H. Campbell, an English physician. Not the ones to conceal the object which caused your flush, Dr., no—but regular glass glasses, "strong convex lenses," he says in the Practitioner. And this is how he demonstrates his proposition:

"The artificial myopia thus induced by blurring the surroundings tends to diminish self-consciousness. The female sex is more apt to blush than the male sex, although more men than women seek medical help for morbid blushing."

Among the "horrible examples" which Dr. Campbell came across in practice were those of a young man who was obliged to leave the army because of blushing; of a physician, forty years old, who abandoned his practice because of it; of a minister, thirty-two, who "blushed" himself out of the pulpit.

Aviator Has Close Call.

A Spanish aviator nearly lost his life by colliding with a swarm of locusts. He was flying at a height of sixty feet, when he ran into the swarm, which so blinded him that he lost control of the machine and fell to the ground. It was regarded as remarkable that he escaped without injuries.

Daily Thought.

Ideals are like stars; you will not succeed in touching them with your hands; but, like the seafaring man on the desert of waters, you chase them as your guides, and, following them, you reach your destiny.—Carl Schurz.

STATE HAPPENINGS

News from Fair Florida Briefly Told

In a high west wind and a heavy sea, the four masted schooner Thos. S. Dennison of Thomaston, Me., bound from Baltimore, Md., to Galveston, Texas, commanded by Capt. G. F. Brown, sank about 100 miles south of Pensacola, January 3. The vessel was carrying a cargo of 2,128 tons steel rail. The vessel was only about 12 years old and had plied the coast between her home port and gulf ports almost continually. The entire crew, consisting of nine men and the captain, was saved. They abandoned the vessel just eight minutes before she sank head first into the waters of the gulf. When the vessel went down there was a mighty explosion which blew away the entire aft part of the ship. The crew, in the ship's yawl, drifted for six days with no hull or power, until making Cedar Key Thursday morning at 7:30 o'clock.

In the immense crowd that thronged the capital city at the inauguration of Gov. Park Trammell were several unfortunate men who were touched, as already reported to Sheriff Houston, for a total sum of $116 by slick crooks who plied their game to good advantage.

Letters patent have just been applied for incorporating the Palatka-Hastings Interurban railroad, with a capital of $250,000. The incorporators and officers are: C. A. Dupont, president; Howell A. Davis, vice president; F. J. H. Von Angelken, secretary; T. R. Byrd, treasurer. Franchises in Putnam and St. Johns counties were applied for simultaneously, and the promoters are very enthusiastic over the project, which it is believed, will mean much for both sections.

Robert E. Whidden of Arcadia, is in a serious condition as the result of a fall by which his hip was broken. About two years ago Mr. Whidden had a stroke of paralysis and since that time he has been compelled to use crutches. In some way his crutch slipped and he fell backward breaking his hip. He is suffering much pain from the fracture.

Potato planting will be on in full blast before the week is past. Already a considerable acreage in excess of that at a corresponding date in former years has been put in. Weather has been most favorable with the exception of two cold spells that has made outside work disagreeable, but have caused but little delay and have done no damage.—Hastings News.

SPARE THE TIME TO LAUGH

Even in Depressing Circumstances It Is Man's Duty to Strive to Be Cheerful.

It is the duty of mankind, even in depressing circumstances, to strive to be cheerful. It is the general belief that if a man is not naturally light-hearted, he cannot make himself so.

Yet this is far from being the case, and there is many a man who is at present a weary burden to his relatives, miserable through the carking care of some bodily ailment perhaps, or some worldly misfortune, who, if he had grown up with the idea that to be cheerful in all circumstances was one of the first duties of life, might still see a pleasant enough world round him.

The worries of a morose person will shorten his days, and the general justice of nature's arrangements provides that his early departure should entail no long regrets.

On the other hand, the man who can laugh keeps his health. To the perfectly healthy laughter comes often. Too commonly, though, as childhood is left behind, the habit fails, and a half smile is the most that visits the thought-lined mouth of a modern man or woman. People become more and more burdened with the accumulation of knowledge and with the weighty responsibilities of life, but they should still spare time to laugh.

Jonathan Wild, Founder of the "Thief Trust"

JONATHAN WILD was a thief who never stole, a business man with no legitimate business, a scoundrel who helped the law, and a man of the law who helped scoundrels. He was founder of one of the queerest monopoly on record—a "Thief Trust."

Wild was born in 1682. He was a Birmingham buckle-maker by trade and came to London as a young man to improve his fortune. A life of dissipation quickly landed him in prison for debt. There he stayed four years, becoming acquainted with almost every thief in London and gaining a strong influence over most of them. By the time he had scraped together enough money to buy his freedom he had already outlined his future career. He saw that crooks never really succeed in life. So he decided to stay "technically" honest, and to profit by others' crimes. Renting a low waterside tavern, he made friends with more outcasts and at last had a large enough following to take up the profession he had planned.

Calling to him a number of notorious thieves, Wild made them a little speech. He explained that the new laws had made life hard for robbers. Theft was not only a "hanging offense," but the receivers of stolen goods were so closely watched that they dared not do business. So he suggested an improvement on the old methods. Any one committing a theft was to come at once to Wild and tell all about it. Wild in turn was to get to the person robbed, and, on the latter's promise to ask no questions, was to offer to return the stolen articles—in payment of a substantial reward. This reward he would give to the thief in exchange for the plunder, keeping one-third of the money as his own commission.

It was a simple arrangement. The victim would get back his property by paying a certain sum; the thieves would make more money than by dealing with regular "receivers" or "fences." Wild, with no danger to himself, would reap a tidy commission on every robbery.

From the first his business prospered. He himself stole nothing, nor did he in any way come within reach of the law. A house, for instance, would be robbed of $2,000 worth of valuables. Wild would go to the owner and tell him that for $600 he would find the lost goods. The money was paid and the goods were returned. Wild clearing $200 on the deal. The work was profitable to him and to the thieves alike. By the world at large he was regarded as a shrewd detective, who was singularly fortunate in tracing lost property. Most people were glad enough to get back their belongings without insisting on the thief's arrest. Wild grew rich, bought a big house and was highly respected. He even added smuggling as a "side line" to his business.

He managed to get thieves wholly in his power by hunting up evidence which (should he place it in the hands of the law) would hang them. By holding this threat over their heads, Wild made the great army of crooks give him slavish obedience and deal exclusively with him. It was a regular "Trust." Once in awhile some stubborn rogue would disobey an order or would refuse to dispose of his booty through the trust's agency. Then Wild, as a reputable citizen, would lay his evidence before the police and would help personally in the capture. Sometimes these arrested slaves of his would turn on him. His body, in fact, was covered with wounds, and in one tussle his skull was fractured. But these cases of rebellion were uncommon.

Robbery thrived as never before. At last parliament was forced to pass a law making it a felony for any one to take money on pretense of restoring stolen goods unless he should also produce the thief. Wild was rich enough to have retired, but the spirit of graft was too strong for him. Hitherto he had been on the right side of the law. Now he found himself on the wrong side of it. He continued to wring thieves' ill-earned money from them and to betray such as failed to follow his orders. At last, in 1725, he was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

As the hangman's cart bore him to Tyburn (London's place of execution) the crowd mobbed him, yelling "Judas!" and stoning the trembling old rascal, leaving little work for the executioner to do when the cart at last reached Tyburn.

AMIABLE STUPIDITY IN WIFE

Once Clever Woman Was Doomed to Celibacy Unless Clever Enough to Act the Part of Fool.

Some years ago a smart London magazine invited 50 prominent men of the day to declare their taste in women and particularly whether they preferred clever or stupid wives.

And the 50 masculine nabobs, literary, artistic, legal, commercial, rushed eagerly into print on this most delicate subject.

Forty-two of them, comments a Los Angeles newspaper woman, pronounced in favor of amiable stupidity, especially in wives. Seven of them—one was Max O'Rell—balked the question and found charms on both sides. And only one declared that he honestly preferred a clever woman, provided she did not think she was cleverer than he was.

And what happened? It just shows the cussedness of the sex. Instead of promptly cultivating amiable imbecility and thus making the supply equal to the demand every last female among them decided that she would be clever from henceforward. No commercial instinct, you see!

And for a year or two things came to such a pass that a clever woman was foredoomed to celibacy from the outset unless she was clever enough to act the fool. From the marriage records one reasonably concludes that a good many of them acted the fool.

But now? Why there never was such a demand for clever women. Not only are they considered absolutely necessary in the various professions in which intelligence is at a high premium, but men even want to marry them!

Street Cries in Minor Key.

"Street cries are nearly always in the minor key," says the Paris Journal des Debats. And an English commentator avers that this key is maintained in our own street cries—such as "Sweet Lavender." And he thinks the explanation is that the minor key involves less strain on the throat that has to emit the same cry all day long. But London cries are few of them in the minor key of the Parisian boy who heralds the evening on the boulevards with "Voila Le Soir." Our own newspaper boy has cultivated the raucous monotone that collects politics and murders into one simple yell. There is nothing of the minor key about the milkman's announcement. And perhaps the least musical of all cries is that of the man who hawks coal about the street. He does not shout "Coal." No stranger would suspect him of coal. He emits only a single bellow, repeated at short intervals, a bellow without form or comeliness; it is the least common denominator of the street cry.

YEAR 1913 SHOULD BE BEST EVER

PROSPECTS FOR BANNER YEAR ARE BEST IN CITY'S HISTORY

MORE BUILDING WILL BE DONE IN DAYTONA AND VICINITY DURING THE COMING SUMMER THAN EVER BEFORE.

With real estate changing hands on all sides in Daytona, Seabreeze and Daytona Beach, the opening up of new subdivisions on both sides of the river and the development of outlying tracts of land, the indications for the building outlook of 1913 are auspicious, indeed.

It is estimated that more property has changed hands in the immediate locality of Daytona during the past three months than is generally transferred in the course of a whole year, and the most transfers generally take place in the spring months, March and April.

Every year more and more people from the colder climates of the north are realizing the desires of their lifetime and getting in positions where they can spend a part of the year at least in the balmy climate of Florida. Many of these people build their own winter abodes, and during the next summer it is anticipated that more cottages and bungalows will be erected in this vicinity than in any past season.

Architects have already been consulted by many who anticipate building within the next 12 months and many who have recently purchased lots have their plans already well in hand.

Although enlargements and additions have been made to many of the hotels during the past two years there is no reason to doubt but what several large additions will be made to this class of buildings during the next summer, so successful are the prospects for a prosperous season for all the hostelries this winter. From present indications the hotels of Daytona will be unable to accomodate the vast crowds of tourists who will visit the "Prettiest Winter Resort in the World," and its environs during the next two months, and to accomodate this increasing throng it will be necessary to continue to add to the hotel accommodations.

The eastern section of Volusia county is becoming known as the winter playground of the nation, and where a few years ago Daytona was almost unknown it has of recent years been placed on the maps and the day is not far distant when it will be known as the most popular winter resort in Florida, outranking all other resort cities by many thousands in population.

The movement for good roads is proving one of the biggest things for this section of the state and the recent action of the board of county commissioners in appointing a county road supervisor to have charge of all the road work is a step in the right direction.

Poor roads and automobile drives has proven one of the biggest hindrances to the fast development of this section of the country, but now that the movement for good, permanent highways is well launched, and there are excellent prospects for Volusia county becoming one of the banner good roads counties of the state, this is expected to be one of the biggest drawing features for people who have desires to build permanent winter homes.

The good roads in Volusia county will be but a link in the extension of the John Anderson highway, and will, in time, extend the full length of the East Coast. In the past the poor roads has been one of the chief arguments of tourists against coming to Florida and why they prefer to take their cars to California.

This assurance that Volusia will soon become a network of good roads has induced a number of persons to invest in property during the past week and has insured the erection of a number of new winter homes during the coming summer.

What will probably be the biggest undertaking in the way of building operations during the coming summer will be the completion of the two wings to the Hotel Clarendon. Plans for these wings have been drawn and preparations are being made for the work of construction to be started soon after the hotel's season closes in the spring.

Jonathan Wild, Founder of the "Thief Trust"

JONATHAN WILD was a thief who never stole, a business man with no legitimate business, a scoundrel who helped the law, and a man of the law who helped scoundrels. He was founder of one of the queerest monopoly on record—a "Thief Trust."

Wild was born in 1682. He was a Birmingham buckle-maker by trade and came to London as a young man to improve his fortune. A life of dissipation quickly landed him in prison for debt. There he stayed four years, becoming acquainted with almost every thief in London and gaining a strong influence over most of them. By the time he had scraped together enough money to buy his freedom he had already outlined his future career. He saw that crooks never really succeed in life. So he decided to stay "technically" honest, and to profit by others' crimes. Renting a low waterside tavern, he made friends with more outcasts and at last had a large enough following to take up the profession he had planned.

Calling to him a number of notorious thieves, Wild made them a little speech. He explained that the new laws had made life hard for robbers. Theft was not only a "hanging offense," but the receivers of stolen goods were so closely watched that they dared not do business. So he suggested an improvement on the old methods. Any one committing a theft was to come at once to Wild and tell all about it. Wild in turn was to get to the person robbed, and, on the latter's promise to ask no questions, was to offer to return the stolen articles—in payment of a substantial reward. This reward he would give to the thief in exchange for the plunder, keeping one-third of the money as his own commission.

It was a simple arrangement. The victim would get back his property by paying a certain sum; the thieves would make more money than by dealing with regular "receivers" or "fences." Wild, with no danger to himself, would reap a tidy commission on every robbery.

From the first his business prospered. He himself stole nothing, nor did he in any way come within reach of the law. A house, for instance, would be robbed of $2,000 worth of valuables. Wild would go to the owner and tell him that for $600 he would find the lost goods. The money was paid and the goods were returned. Wild clearing $200 on the deal. The work was profitable to him and to the thieves alike. By the world at large he was regarded as a shrewd detective, who was singularly fortunate in tracing lost property. Most people were glad enough to get back their belongings without insisting on the thief's arrest. Wild grew rich, bought a big house and was highly respected. He even added smuggling as a "side line" to his business.

He managed to get thieves wholly in his power by hunting up evidence which (should he place it in the hands of the law) would hang them. By holding this threat over their heads, Wild made the great army of crooks give him slavish obedience and deal exclusively with him. It was a regular "Trust." Once in awhile some stubborn rogue would disobey an order or would refuse to dispose of his booty through the trust's agency. Then Wild, as a reputable citizen, would lay his evidence before the police and would help personally in the capture. Sometimes these arrested slaves of his would turn on him. His body, in fact, was covered with wounds, and in one tussle his skull was fractured. But these cases of rebellion were uncommon.

Robbery throve as never before. At last parliament was forced to pass a law making it a felony for any one to take money on pretense of restoring stolen goods unless he should also produce the thief. Wild was rich enough to have retired, but the spirit of graft was too strong for him. Hitherto he had been on the right side of the law. Now he found himself on the wrong side of it. He continued to wring thieves' ill-earned money from them and to betray such as failed to follow his orders. At last, in 1725, he was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

As the hangman's cart bore him to Tyburn (London's place of execution) the crowd mobbed him, yelling "Judas!" and stoning the trembling old rascal, leaving little work for the executioner to do when the cart at last reached Tyburn.

CONGRESS TO GET NAVAL BILL AGAIN

MAY NOT BE ADOPTED AS PRESENTED BY DEPARTMENT

CONGRESS LIKELY TO VOTE AGAINST THE PROVISION FOR TWO MIDSHIPMEN FROM EACH DISTRICT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. — The military and naval affairs committee of the house and senate, respectively, will present soon again to congress the familiar legislative project known as the naval personnel bill. Although the bill to be presented is a revision of the old personnel bill, it will incorporate new plans, such as the authorization of two midshipmen from each congressional district and four from each state. It will contain a provision for the commissioning of enlisted men of the marine corps as officers, and the amalgamation of the pay and construction corps with the line. It also aims to provide a regulated flow of promotion.

This measure is presented to congress through the navy department as a necessity for the welfare of the service. It is doubtful, however, according to navy officers as to whether or not congress will unanimously adopt the personnel bill as recommended by the navy department.

Congress, according to many, will vote against the clause which permits each senator and representative to maintain two midshipmen at the naval academy. Should this be the case, department commanders say the legislation will be calamitous. It will continue the old system at the academy of a "numerical output," which has proven overwhelming.

Already the lieutenants of the navy are complaining of their arrested promotion in the navy by reason of its overcrowded condition. They are urging that the representation in Annapolis be "primed" so that when a man enters the service as a cadet, he may have a chance after 40 years of duty to retire at some grade higher than when he first took his commission.

At present under existing conditions, the officer who graduates from the naval academy during the next four or five years will find his advancement hopelessly retarded. He or some of his associates would be retired as ensigns were it not for the fact that they are automatically promoted out of the grade of ensign after three years of service.

Apparently the naval officers are right about the personnel bill. It is shown that there is a pressing need of an extension to the system if there is to be a maintenance of efficiency, a stimulation of endeavor, the protection of contentment, and the reward of merit. Without these elements in the naval officers' career the service is bound to suffer deterioration of personnel for an emergency.

NEGRO GAMBLER IS ORDERED TO BEAT IT FROM THE CITY

GIVEN ALTERNATIVE OF LEAVING TOWN OR SERVING 30 DAYS HE CHOOSES TO HIKE TO OTHER FIELDS.

Charged with gambling as the result of the breaking up of a crap game last night, Clarence Coward, Henry Marshall and Jesse Williams, all colored, were called in mayor's court this morning to plead. Coward and Marshall appeared and both pleaded guilty, but Williams did not appear in court. Williams' bond of $5 was forfeited, Marshall was fined $4 and costs, and Coward, who is a Cocoa negro who came here recently from Jacksonville, was given the alternative of serving 30 days on the streets or leaving the city before noon. He took the alternative of leaving the city at once and the marshal was instructed to see that he went beyond the city limits.

A. Thomas and Ed Armstrong were charged with fighting. Thomas' bond of $10 was forfeited and the marshal was instructed to rearrest him and bring him into court. Armstrong's case was continued.

William Graham, colored, was fined $2 and costs for shooting within the city limits.

William Wilson colored, was fined $2 and costs for doing business without a license and was instructed to procure a license at once.

DAYTONA MAY HAVE A BETTER LIGHTING SYSTEM

EXPERIMENTS WILL BE MADE TO DETERMINE BEST METHOD OF LIGHTING CITY STREETS—PUBLIC TO BE NOTIFIED.

A committee from the Daytona board of trade composed of Messrs. S. H. Gove, Rolland E. Stevens and Col. C. M. Bingham, met with the street committee of the city council, H. E. Burdick, Lew Smith and E. J. Mills, Thursday evening and discussed with Supt. E. L. Gunn of the [illegible] Electric, Ice and Water company, ways and means of improving the lighting of the city streets.

One of the changes advocated is the use of several incandescent lights in place of arc lights now in use and Mr. Gunn proposes to make some experiments along this line and also in the different arrangement of the arc lights at such time in the future as he can get the time necessary to prepare for them. The said experiments will be made on Ridgewood avenue on the blocks between Bay street and Live Oak avenue and the public will be given due notice of the time of the experiments in order that people may judge of the merit of the different methods employed.

Already the lieutenants of the navy are complaining of their arrested promotion in the navy by reason of its overcrowded condition. They are urging that the representation in Annapolis be "primed" so that when a man enters the service as a cadet, he may have a chance after 40 years of duty to retire at some grade higher than when he first took his commission.

At present under existing conditions, the officer who graduates from the naval academy during the next four or five years will find his advancement hopelessly retarded. He or some of his associates would be retired as ensigns were it not for the fact that they are automatically promoted out of the grade of ensign after three years of service.

Apparently the naval officers are right about the personnel bill. It is shown that there is a pressing need of an extension to the system if there is to be a maintenance of efficiency, a stimulation of endeavor, the protection of contentment, and the reward of merit. Without those elements in the naval officers career the service is bound to suffer deterioration of personnel for an emergency.

DAYTONA MAY HAVE A BETTER LIGHTING SYSTEM

EXPERIMENTS WILL BE MADE TO DETERMINE BEST METHOD OF LIGHTING CITY STREETS—PUBLIC TO BE NOTIFIED.

A committee from the Daytona board of trade composed of Messrs. S. H. Gove, Rolland E. Stevens and Col. C. M. Bingham, met with the street committee of the city council, H. E. Burdick, Lew Smith and E. J. Mills, Thursday evening and discussed with Supt. E. L. Gunn of the Schantz Electric, Ice and Water company, ways and means of improving the lighting of the city streets.

One of the changes advocated is the use of several incandescent lights in place of arc lights now in use and Mr. Gunn proposes to make some experiments along this line and also in the different arrangement of the arc lights at such time in the future as he can get the time necessary to prepare for them. The said experiments will be made on Ridgewood avenue on the blocks between Bay street and Live Oak avenue and the public will be given due notice of the time of the experiments in order that people may judge of the merit of the different methods employed.

"So I did, Susie," the mother replied. "The Smiths are understood to be worth millions."

"Mamma," said the child, "I don't believe a word of it. I think they are very poor."

"Why, Susie," remarked the astonished mother, "how did you get such an idea into your head?"

"'Cause I saw two ladies playing on a piano at the same time," was Susie's response.

"That's often done," mother explained. "The ladies were playing a duet."

"But that wasn't all, mamma. Mrs. Smith's hat looks for all the world like her kitchen colander trimmed, and Georgie Smith was wearing his father's trousers."

"Why, Susie," remonstrated the mother, "how you talk!"

"It's true, all the same, mamma. I know they were Mr. Smith's trousers, 'cause they were so long for Georgie that he had 'em turned up at the bottom of each leg."

Small Sarah was unfamiliar with trousers adorned with "cuffs."

MISS LAW TO MAKE DAILY FLIGHTS FROM THE BEACH

YOUNG WOMAN COMES FROM FAMILY OF "FLYERS" AND HAS NEVER HAD AN ACCIDENT IN THE AIR.

Miss Ruth Bancroft Law, the woman aviatrix who will make daily flights from Hotel Clarendon during the season, weather permitting, comes from a family which has been dividing honors with the feathered tribe for some time past, her brother being the first person to ever make a parachute jump off the statue of Liberty.

Miss Law is a young woman of pleasing personality and talks interestingly of her experiences since she has taken up flying. In speaking of some of the difficulties which confronted her when she first made up her mind to take up aviation, she told of the difficulties she encountered in trying to get a machine. The Wright people refused to sell her a machine and tried to discourage the idea of a woman trying for a license. However, not daunted by their efforts to discourage her she stuck to her original idea to fly, and fly she would. While stopping in Boston she made the acquaintance of Farnum Fish of Los Angeles, and after continued effort and persuasion on her part Mr. Fish finally agreed to teach her to fly and after preliminaries were arranged she started her course of instruction at the Atwood Park aviation course.

Miss Law is the only licensed aviatrix flying today and she has never had an accident. During her stay here Miss Law will take a limited number of pupils.

RATS CAUSE WATER FAMINE

Thirsty Rodents Gnaw Lead Pipe and Ship's Supply of Drinking Water is Lost.

It is a very serious thing to be waterless at sea. This is what happened recently to the bark Sapphire, bound from South American ports to Puget Sound, but the water famine was neither the result of carelessness, drought or a protracted voyage. When half the journey had been accomplished the [illegible]-gallon tank suddenly went dry. As it happened over night and the tank had no hole in it the calamity was a mystery, and some superstitious members of the crew immediately ascribed it to a supernatural agency. But the second mate, a hard-headed Yankee, investigated, and found that a section of the lead pipe leading from the tank had been almost gnawed in two by the army of rats that infested the ship. There was no water on board except that in the tank, which was closely covered, and the creatures, half mad with thirst, had evidently attacked the pipe in a body. The stream of escaping water must have drowned many of them, as there was a great decrease in their numbers. There were about a hundred cases of mineral water in the cargo, and these were broached to supply the crew until some port could be reached to refill the tank. An ingenious sailor also rigged up a condenser from the primitive materials at hand, but this furnished only about a quart of fresh water a day, which was used for cooking. When the Sapphire reached Seattle the captain had the water tank fitted with an iron pipe thick enough to resist all future attacks.

TWO SCENES IN TWO LIVES

By MARGARET BARR

One bright, frosty morning an elderly gentleman [illegible] was taking the air walking about his place. It was not spacious, and the house was not palatial. [illegible] rated as owner of moderate means, but there was something about the premises that denoted he was refined. There was a whirring of wheels up the road and an automobile appeared. Beside the chauffeur there was only one person aboard, a middle aged lady well wrapped in fur robes. The vehicle had reached a point perhaps a hundred yards from the place described when there was an explosion like a pistol shot. The auto swerved and in doing so went over.

The chauffeur was unhurt, but not the lady. The gentleman who saw the catastrophe went to her assistance. She was lying with closed eyes, but she soon opened them and looked at the man bending over her.

"Tell me, madam," he said, "how badly hurt you are that I may decide what to do."

"I don't know," she said in a faint voice, "but I doubt if my injuries are serious."

The chauffeur joined them, and the two carried the lady to the house. Two young ladies, the daughters of the host, took her in charge, while the gentleman telephoned for a surgeon. When the medical man arrived he pronounced the lady unhurt, with the exception of a sprained ankle, which prevented her walking. He said she might be driven to her home at any time. Left alone with her host, the lady said:

"This is a singular meeting, Mr. Channing."

The gentleman started. "We have met before?" he asked.

"Yes. You were once well known to me. But that was twenty years ago, and my age is just double what it was then. It is not remarkable that you should not recognize me."

"But you have recognized me."

"There is a reason for that."

"Will you give it?"

"Yes, but not directly. I will tell you a little story. The scene is the veranda of a house on an eminence overlooking a river. The season is spring. The hour was that when the twilight fades into night. A new moon is standing over the western horizon.

"Two young persons were sitting on the veranda, a man and a woman. The man took her hand in one of his, the other he stole around her waist. 'I love you,' he said, 'and I wish you to be my wife.' The words were simple but more winning from their simplicity. It was the happiest moment of her life.

"But not relishing being won too easily she asked for time, promising an answer within a few days. He assented, but reluctantly. When a few days had passed she looked for him to come to her for her answer. He did not come. A month passed and she received a letter from him from a distant city, telling her that he had suddenly been called away; that a new field had opened to him, but that it would be a long while before he could expect any great success. Had she loved him deeply she would not have asked for time. This was probably fortunate, since he would not be near her; a long while must pass before they could be married, and he would only stand in her way of being settled for life. If she agreed with him in this no answer to the question he had asked was necessary. If that answer was to have been 'Yes' and she preferred to stand by it she might write him, and he would do his best to make good his offer.

"This chilled her first and only love. She wrote him that doubtless he was right about the matter, and since his view was here, she considered his offer annulled."

The lady had reached this point, which was the end of her story, when one of the young ladies in the house brought in a dainty luncheon on a salver. She would have lingered, but her father told her that the stranger was not equal to seeing more than one person at a time. The girl withdrew. Then he spoke.

"There is a period in a man's life between, say, eighteen and twenty-five, when what he is to be is forming. He is clay ready to thrust into the furnace. This person you speak of was then in that condition. He was at an important point of his life when the two elements, caution and daring, are struggling for the mastery. In his case caution prevailed. And yet for a time the chances between the two were equal.

"This person who at a critical moment looked behind him never again came to a point where he could confidently, fearlessly look before him. He has lived a negative life. He has been a failure."

There was a deep sadness in his last words. The lady took his hand in hers and pressed it sympathetically.

"The carriage that was ordered has arrived," said one of the young girls, throwing open the door.

The injured woman was helped to the carriage and when seated thanked those she left for their kindness, then she was driven away.

"I wonder," said one of the sisters that evening, "what is the matter with papa. Ever since that automobile accident he has looked so sad."

"Has he?" said the other. "I haven't noticed it."

The vehicle had reached a point perhaps a hundred yards from the place described when there was an explosion like a pistol shot. The auto swerved and in doing so went over.

The chauffeur was unhurt. Not so the lady. The gentleman who saw the catastrophe went to her assistance. She was lying with closed eyes, but she soon opened them and looked at the man bending over her.

"Tell me, madam," he said, "how badly hurt you are that I may decide what to do."

"I don't know," she said in a faint voice, "but I doubt if my injuries are serious."

The chauffeur joined them, and the two carried the lady to the house. Two young ladies, the daughters of the host, took her in charge, while the gentleman telephoned for a surgeon. When the medical man arrived he pronounced the lady unhurt, with the exception of a sprained ankle, which prevented her walking. He said she might be driven to her home at any time. Left alone with her host, the lady said:

"This is a singular meeting, Mr. Canning."

The gentleman started. "We have met before?" he asked.

"Yes. You were once well known to me. But that was twenty years ago, and my age is just double what it was then. It is not remarkable that you should not recognize me."

"But you have recognized me."

"There is a reason for that."

"Will you give it?"

"Yes, but not directly. I will tell you a little story. The scene is the veranda of a house on an eminence overlooking a river. The season is spring. The hour was that when the twilight fades into night. A new moon is standing over the western horizon.

"Two young persons were sitting on the veranda, a man and a woman. The man took her hand in one of his; the other he stole around her waist. 'I love you,' he said, 'and I wish you to be my wife.' The words were simple but more winning from their simplicity. It was the happiest moment of her life.

"But not relishing being won too easily she asked for time, promising an answer within a few days. He assented, but reluctantly. When a few days had passed she looked for him to come to her for her answer. He did not come. A month passed and she received a letter from him from a distant city, telling her that he had suddenly been called away; that a new field had opened to him, but that it would be a long while before he could expect any great success. Had she loved him deeply she would not have asked for time. This was probably fortunate, since he could not be near her, a long while must pass before they could be married, and he would only stand in her way of being settled for life. If she agreed with him in this an answer to the question he had asked was not necessary. If that answer was to have been 'Yes' and she preferred to stand by it she might write him, and he would do his best to make good his offer.

"This chilled her first and only love. She wrote him that doubtless he was right about the matter, and since his view was hers, she considered his offer annulled."

The lady had reached this point which was the end of her story, when one of the young ladies in the house brought in a dainty luncheon on a salver. She would have lingered, but her father told her that the stranger was not equal to seeing more than one person at a time. The girl withdrew. Then he spoke.

"There is a period in a man's life between, say, eighteen and twenty-five, when what he is to be is forming. He is clay ready to thrust into the furnace. This person you speak of was then in that condition. He was at an important point of his life when the two elements, caution and daring, are struggling for the mastery. In his case caution prevailed. And yet for a time the chances between the two were equal.

"This person who at a critical moment looked behind him never again came to a point where he could confidently, fearlessly look before him. He has lived a negative life. He has been a failure."

There was a deep sadness in his last words. The lady took his hand in hers and pressed it sympathetically.

"The carriage that was ordered has arrived," said one of the young girls, throwing open the door.

The injured woman was helped to the carriage and when seated thanked those she left for their kindness, then she was driven away.

"I wonder," said one of the sisters that evening, "what is the matter with papa. Ever since that automobile accident he has looked so sad."

"Has he?" said the other. "I haven't noticed it."

In spite of the fact that Major Dan Morris owns an automobile and does not always carry the air of a chauffeur, there was one time recently when he had to insist that he was entitled to the privilege of eating in the main dining room of the College Arms hotel, and that he was not the mechanician in charge of Commodore Dumpsey's car. Which only goes to prove that you can't tell by the looks of a frog how far he can jump.

County Commissioner Wm. Jackson is to be commended for the first action he started after taking his seat — the motion wh'ch resulted in the appointment of a county road supervisor. It is believed the first year of operation under the new system will show such a beneficial result the county board will have the thanks of citizens in all parts of the county for the action taken.

As a relic of historical interest, as well as marking one of the prettiest spots in this section of the country, it is to be hoped the movement to have the old sugar mill west of Port Orange put into a better state of preservation, will not die a natural death. Situated between St. Augustine and New Smyrna, both of which claim to be the oldest settlements in the United States, and are preserving every relic of historical interest to back up those claims, Daytona should lose no opportunity to prove this section of the country also has a right to be included in that portion of the state settled by the Spaniards.

The growing popularity of the daily band concerts is a source of much satisfaction to the men who were behind the movement to raise the fund to secure the band for the season. The fact that Daytona is furnishing visitors this season with one of the most pleasing forms of entertainment will be well advertised throughout the country when the tourists return north in the spring, just as the fact that there has been no kind of entertainment for visitors has been one of the biggest handicaps under which the city has labored during previous season, but the band concerts have, to a large extent, taken away this feeling of "nothing doing in Daytona."

J. W. Booth is some collector. Not only is he a collector of city licenses and taxes, alligators, snakes, etc., but his reputation as a collector is so strong that even dead and pickled snakes float back to him after they have been well preserved and presented to another man as a curiosity. About a year ago a man brought to Mr. Booth a large rattlesnake which had been killed, to be skinned and stuffed. Inside the big snake Mr. Booth found 12 small rattlesnakes and these he preserved in alcohol in a large bottle. Shortly afterward he presented them to a Jacksonville newspaper man, knowing full well that is the only way a newspaper man can get snakes, and the man took the collection, bottle and all to his home in the metropolis. This was last winter. Yesterday a man fished that bottle of snakes out of the Halifax river near the city dock and returned them to Mr. Booth. If J. W. is sent to the insane asylum it will be because of trying to figure out how the snakes come back to Daytona.

A recent issue of Everybody's magazine contains an excellent article on "Tips," by Richard Barry, who goes very thoroughly into the subject of the extremes to which tipping is being carried in this country and properly scores both the giver and receiver of tips, yet advances no remedy for the evil, for an evil it has become. As Mr. Barry says, it is an individual question and the solution must depend as do other matters of morality very largely upon the uplift of the ideas of the whole people through the advancement of the individuals. Tipping, he says, was imported from Europe where a class distinction exists and has no proper place in this country where men are supposed to be free and equal, except in the case of the negro, who is the natural inferior of the caucasian. To offer to your social equal a tip is an insult and to take a tip is to acknowledge yourself the inferior of the giver, yet many otherwise self respecting American citizens are guilty of this form of debasement. There is really as much degradation in the acceptance of a tip by a white man in this country as there is in the sale of his vote. Mr. Barry notes also the inconsistency of the tipping system which demands it in a barber shop but does not permit it in a grocery store, although the barber's assistant and the grocer's clerk are both rendering a personal service for which one is as much as entitled as the other for personal recompense. The whole trouble lies in the innate selfishness of man and the average American is the most selfish of individuals, continually striving to advance his own interests even by buying the rights of others whenever possible. Selfishness, in fact, is the one great curse of the American people, playing a strong part both in private and public life, in politics and even in religion.

"Now," the manager complained, "here is an interesting play; the star is young, beautiful and a splendid actress; the company is a capable, well-balanced one, and the production is excellent in every respect—yet it is a failure. The people simply will not become interested in it. How do you account for it?"

"I don't account for it," replied the man with the high brow and the wrinkles which indicated that he was in the habit of thinking. "I have made a rather careful study of the public during the last few years, and if you think talent, worthiness and general excellence are to be relied upon for success in any art or profession which is compelled to depend upon public patronage it will be a waste of time to do any accounting for the failure you mention."

What Troubled Him.

"Doctor," said Dennis, the old squire's valet, "don't you think the master is getting mighty thin?"

"No harm in that, Dennis," said the doctor; "he was too fat. He'll be healthier when he's thinner."

"Likely he will," said Dennis, disconsolately; "but (I) won't be able to wear his old clothes then!"

A New Year's House Party

By JOHN H. MORRISON

We were two boys and three girls in our family, the youngest fifteen, the oldest twenty-six, when we gave the New Year's house party that proved a turning point in my life. Every room in the house was occupied, some of them by three persons. We had scarcely got together when we began a series of practical jokes on one another, at which the girls were far more adept than the boys. The very first night the sheets in every fellow's bed were stitched, and the next day at luncheon there were cream cakes on the table filled with cotton provided by the girls. One fellow swallowed his cake, cotton and all, rather than confess himself stung.

We sat up so late nights and some of us were stirring so early in the morning that we were ready to fall asleep at any moment. One evening when playing the game of "twenty questions" I was sent into another room while the others chose something for me to guess. There was no light in the room where I waited, but there was an easy chair. I sat down in the chair and fell asleep.

I was awakened by a kiss. I grabbed a girl, but she got away from me, though only after a fierce struggle. When I had once lost her it was not easy to find her, though the rustling of her skirts was a disadvantage to her, while my greater weight, rendering my tread heavier, was constantly betraying me. She dodged me for some time, when all became quiet. Then suddenly I heard the door open and close. Since the adjoining room was also dark I knew that the others had turned off the lights to enable the girl I was after to escape. The escape having been effected, I went to the door to go out. I found it locked.

It was some ten minutes before it was opened, and I joined the others, the room having been relighted. I cast my eyes from one girl to another with a view to discovering who had kissed me. The first girl I looked at had a scratch on her nose. But the second also had a scratch, and the third. Indeed, every girl was scratched. I looked at the fellows and saw that they were all laughing at me.

Now, among our guests there was one girl for whom my heart had begun to beat. I would have given a kingdom if I had had it for proof that Marie had done the kissing. Whoever had done it had doubtless been dared. Whether my preference for Marie had been noticed by the other girls and when I was found asleep she had been chosen to play the joke on me I didn't know. If she had done the kissing she certainly showed no evidence of the fact, that is, any more than the rest of the girls—a scratched nose. But there was one thing that led me to suspect her. While every other girl in the room was keyed up to the highest pitch of mischief, their eyes dancing, their lips, cheeks, every other feature smiling, Marie seemed simply unconcerned.

At 2 a. m. I went to bed no wiser as to the identity of the kisser than before. But the next morning after having dressed, noticing that I needed to change my handkerchief, I jerked it from the outside pocket of my coat and heard something land on the floor. Stooping, I picked up a stickpin.

It at once occurred to me that during the scuffle of the evening before the pin had fallen from the lady's apparel, probably from about her neck, and caught on my handkerchief. Unfortunately it was a very inexpensive article with an imitation pearl for a head and did not identify any particular girl. I realized the importance of keeping my find a secret. Going down to breakfast, I found that three different girls wore pins that were duplicates of the one I possessed. They were the most likely to be suspected, and among them was Marie. Doubtless if there had been enough such articles to go round every girl would have worn a stickpin as well as a scratched nose. By and by it occurred to me that when the pin was in transit from the girl to my pocket it had made the scratch on her nose.

The problem was now narrowed down to three girls, for doubtless the girl who had done the kissing was among those who wore pins. It seemed to me that I must make her betray herself or the victory would be with the girls. I sat down to the breakfast table, ignoring my find. But while the girls were rinsing their dainty fingers in their finger bowls I said:

"I have found something that belonged to the girl who kissed me last night."

Every girl expressed by her behavior a keen interest in what I said except Marie, who took advantage of rinsing her fingers to bend over the little glass bowl before her. I made up my mind that I was getting "warm," as the children say in hide and seek, and concluded on a bold stroke. I continued:

"You may think that a little stickpin she lost when trying to get away from me is what I refer to. It is not."

Every girl stopped smiling and looked serious. I could see Marie wince.

"The girl who kissed me I love," I went on, "and I am ready to proclaim it here before you all."

I fixed my gaze on Marie. A hot flame sprang into her cheeks. To conceal it she turned away and presently threw up the sponge by covering her face with her napkin.

The next year Marie and I entertained the same party in our own house.

The people simply will not become interested in it. How do you account for it?"

"I don't account for it," replied the man with the high brow and the wrinkles which indicated that he was in the habit of thinking. "I have made a rather careful study of the public during the last few years, and if you think talent, worthiness and general excellence are to be relied upon for success in any art or profession which is compelled to depend upon public patronage it will be a waste of time to do any accounting for the failure you mention."

What Troubled Him.

"Docthor," said Dennis, the old squire's valet, "don't yez think the masther is getting mighty thin?"

"No harm in that, Dennis," said the doctor; "he was too fat. He'll be healthier when he's thinner."

"Loikely he will," said Dennis, disappointedly; "but Oi won't be able to wear his ould clothes then!"

A New Year's House Party

By JOHN R. MORRISON

We were two boys and three girls in our family, the youngest fifteen, the eldest twenty-six, when we gave the New Year's house party that proved a turning point in my life. Every room in the house was occupied, some of them by three persons. We had scarcely got together when we began a series of practical jokes on one another, at which the girls were far more adept than the boys. The very first night the sheets in every fellow's bed were scotched, and the next day at luncheon there were cream cakes on the table filled with cotton provided by the girls. One fellow swallowed his cake, cotton and all, rather than confess himself stung.

We sat up so late nights and some of us were stirring so early in the morning that we were ready to fall asleep at any moment. One evening when playing the game of "twenty questions" I was sent into another room while the others chose something for me to guess. There was no light in the room where I waited, but there was an easy chair. I sat down in the chair and fell asleep.

I was awakened by a kiss. I grabbed a girl, but she got away from me, though only after a fierce struggle. When I had once lost her it was not easy to find her, though the rustling of her skirts was a disadvantage to her, while my greater weight, rendering my tread heavier, was constantly betraying me. She dodged me for some time, when all became quiet. Then suddenly I heard the door open and close. Since the adjoining room was also dark I knew that the others had turned off the lights to enable the girl I was after to escape. The escape having been effected, I went to the door to go out. I found it locked.

It was some ten minutes before it was opened, and I joined the others, the room having been relighted. I cast my eyes from one girl to another with a view to discovering who had kissed me. The first girl I looked at had a scratch on her nose. But the second also had a scratch, and the third. Indeed, every girl was scratched. I looked at the fellows and saw that they were all laughing at me.

Now, among our guests there was one girl for whom my heart had begun to beat. I would have given a kingdom if I had had it for proof that Maria had done the kissing. Whoever had done it had doubtless been dared. Whether my preference for Maria had been noticed by the other girls and when I was found asleep she had been chosen to play the joke on me I didn't know. If she had done the kissing she certainly showed no evidence of the fact—that is, any more than the rest of the girls—a scratched nose. But there was one thing that led me to suspect her. While every other girl in the room was keyed up to the highest pitch of mischief, their eyes dancing, their lips, cheeks, every other feature smiling, Maria seemed simply unconcerned.

At 2 a. m. I went to bed no wiser as to the identity of the kisser than before. But the next morning after having dressed, noticing that I needed to change my handkerchief, I jerked it from the outside pocket of my coat and heard something land on the floor. Stooping, I picked up a stickpin.

It at once occurred to me that during the scuffle of the evening before the pin had fallen from the lady's apparel, probably from about the neck, and caught on my handkerchief. Unfortunately it was a very inexpensive article with an imitation pearl for a head and did not identify any particular girl. I realized the importance of keeping my find a secret. Going down to breakfast, I found that three different girls wore pins that were duplicates of the one I possessed. They were the most likely to be suspected, and among them was Maria. Doubtless if there had been enough such articles to go round every girl would have worn a stickpin as well as a scratched nose. By and by it occurred to me that when the pin was in transit from the girl to my pocket it had made the scratch on her nose.

The problem was now narrowed down to three girls, for doubtless the girl who had done the kissing was among those who wore pins. It seemed to me that I must make her betray herself or the victory would be with the girls. I sat down to the breakfast table, ignoring my find. But while the girls were rinsing their dainty fingers in their finger bowls I said:

"I have found something that belonged to the girl who kissed me last night."

Every girl expressed by her behavior a keen interest in what I said except Maria, who took advantage of rinsing her fingers to bend over the little glass bowl before her. I made up my mind that I was getting "warm," as the children say in hide and seek, and concluded on a bold stroke. I continued:

"You may think that a little stickpin she lost when trying to get away from me is what I refer to. It is not."

Every girl stopped smiling and looked serious. I could see Maria wince.

"The girl who kissed me I love," I went on, "and I am ready to proclaim it here before you all."

I fixed my gaze on Maria. A hot flame sprang into her cheeks. To conceal it she turned away and presently threw up the sponge by covering her face with her napkin.

The next year Maria and I entertained the same party in our own house.

"BABY MINE."

"Baby Mine," the international comedy success, right out of Boston with its eight weeks' engagement at the Majestic Theatre, comes to the New Daytona Theatre next Tuesday night under the direction of William A. Brady, Ltd. It has a record of a solid year at Daly's theatre, New York, and is now in its second year in London, at the Criterion theatre, with every indication of remaining there permanently. One of the elements of success of "Baby Mine" is the heartiness with which it is presented by the excellent company. Laughter is never forced, and is never courted by an approach to vulgarity. The company seems to enter completely into the fun of the thing and to enjoy it as much as the audience. Their spirit is unflagging, and their perception of the possibilities of every situation complete. If it is true that a good hearty laugh saves a man a doctor's bill, "Baby Mine" will make every play goer add a long list of credits to his medicine account.

Beauty of Woodwork.

There is a friendly atmosphere in the presence of much woodwork—not painted wood, but wood finished to show the beauty of its natural growth—that is entirely lost in an expanse of smooth, hard paint. Its mellow lights and soft shades form a far more restful background than any papered surface, and its strength and durability make a wood finish ideal for a house that is to suggest the feeling of permanence and stability that belongs to the true home.—Suburban Life.

MASONS IN CHARGE OF L. H. KARN FUNERAL

Funeral services were held this morning at 10 o'clock at the Bingham & Maley company's undertaking parlors over the remains of Lewis H. Karn, who died at his home in Port Orange Monday night of apoplexy. Masonic service was conducted by Halifax Lodge No. 81, F. & A. M., of this city, of which and other Masonic bodies here the deceased had been a member for many years. Rev. Wm. L. Leishler, Lutheran minister of Wabasso, also assisted in the services.

Following the services the body was placed in the retaining vault in Pinewood cemetery, Daytona Beach, to remain until spring when it will be taken to Mr. Karn's birthplace, Burkettsville, Md., for interment.

The deceased was born at Burkettsville, Md., June 13, 1850, was married November 22, 1872, and came to Port Orange with his wife in 1894, where he has since resided, for many years holding the office of justice of the peace. He was made a Mason in Middletown, Md., about 1873.

Mr. Karn was well known throughout this section and the funeral was largely attended not only by Masons but by friends from Port Orange this city and neighboring towns.

*South American Panamas, Japan, Manila, Java and Peanit hats just received, the very latest shapes. M. Ella DeVoy.

Special Privilege.

Rev. Lyman Powell of Northampton has a bright little son who is very much frightened in thunderstorms, says the Cosmopolitan. One day a heavy shower came up when the little fellow had wandered away from the house. His father, who was watching for him, saw him come running toward home as the first drops fell. He looked terrified and his lips were moving.

"What were you saying?" asked his father.

"I was reminding God that I am a minister's son," the boy replied.

"BABY MINE."

"Baby Mine," the international comedy success, right out of Boston with its eight weeks' engagement at the Majestic Theatre, comes to the New Daytona Theatre next Tuesday night under the direction of William A. Brady, Ltd. It has a record of a solid year at Daly's theater, New York, and is now in its second year in London, at the Criterion theatre, with every indication of remaining there permanently. One of the elements of success of "Baby Mine" is the heartiness with which it is presented by the excellent company. Laughter is never forced, and is never courted by an approach to vulgarity. The company seems to enter completely into the fun of the thing and to enjoy it as much as the audience. Their spirit is unflagging, and their perception of the possibilities of every situation complete. If it is true that a good hearty laugh saves a man a doctor's bill, "Baby Mine" will make every play goer add a long list of credits to his medicine account.

Beauty of Woodwork.

There is a friendly atmosphere in the presence of much woodwork—not painted wood, but wood finished to show the beauty of its natural growth—that is entirely lost in an expanse of smooth, hard paint. Its mellow lights and soft shades form a far more restful background than any papered surface, and its strength and durability make a wood finish ideal for a house that is to suggest the feeling of permanence and stability that belongs to the true home.—Suburban Life.

MASONS IN CHARGE OF L. H. KARN FUNERAL.

Funeral services were held this morning at 10 o'clock at the Bingham & Maley company's undertaking parlors over the remains of Lewis H. Karn, who died at his home in Port Orange Monday night of apoplexy. Masonic service was conducted by Halifax Lodge No. 81, F. & A. M., of this city, of which and other Masonic bodies here the deceased had been a member for many years. Rev. Wm. L. Leishler, Lutheran minister of Wabasso, also assisted in the services.

Following the services the body was placed in the retaining vault in Pinewood cemetery, Daytona Beach, to remain until spring when it will be taken to Mr. Karn's birthplace, Burkettsville, Md., for interment.

The deceased was born at Burkettsville, Md., June 19, 1850, was married November 22, 1872, and came to Port Orange with his wife in 1894, where he has since resided, for many years holding the office of justice of the peace. He was made a Mason in Middletown, Md., about 1872.

Mr. Karn was well known throughout this section and the funeral was largely attended not only by Masons but by friends from Port Orange, this city and neighboring towns.

Special Privilege.

Rev. Lyman Powell of Northampton has a bright little son who is very much frightened in thunderstorms, says the Cosmopolitan. One day a heavy shower came up when the little fellow had wandered away from the house. His father, who was watching for him, saw him come running toward home as the first drops fell. He looked terrified and his lips were moving.

"What were you saying?" asked his father.

"I was reminding God that I am a minister's son," the boy replied.
